

Volume

1

PIRCHEI SHOSHANIM

Shulchan Aruch Learning Project

Hilchos Shabbos

PIRCHEI SHOSHANIM SHULCHAN ARUCH LEARNING PROJECT

Hilchos Shabbos Volume I

Shiur 1

© Pirchei Shoshanim

This shiur may not be reproduced in any form without permission of the copyright holder

Rehov Bayit Vegan 99, Yerushalayim 03-616-6340
164 Village Path, Lakewood NJ 08701 732.370.3344 fax 1.877.Pirchei (732.367.8168)

SH'HIYA: POTS ON THE FIRE

Simon 253:1

Part I

The Laws for Kiroh and Tanur:

Placing Pots on the Fire on Erev Shabbos

1 A kiroh is one which is constructed in the shape of a kettle. Pots are placed on top of it, where it has its mouth, and there is room for placing two pots. If this kiroh was fired by means of gefes, which is the refuse of olives, or with wood, one may not place food on it to cook before sunset, (on Erev Shabbos), with the intention of leaving it there (until after Shabbos arrives) – unless the food has already been fully cooked and 1) is condensing (i.e., due to the continuous shrinkage that will result from the cooking) to its detriment, in which case it need not be feared that the coals in the stove will be stirred. It is also permitted to place the pot on the stove if the food 2) is raw, i.e., (1) it has not been cooked at all. For since it is raw, one will not pay attention to it until the next morning, while it is possible for it to finish cooking during the night without raking the coals.

However, if the food is only partially, but not fully, cooked, or even if it is fully cooked but condensing through cooking will improve it, we are concerned that the coals might be stoked. Therefore placing it on the stove is forbidden unless the stove is raked i.e., all the coals are removed from it or are covered with ashes i.e., the coals are 3) covered with ashes, so as to lessen their heat intensity.

If a 4) (2) raw piece (of meat) is put into the pot, it is muter just as if it would consist entirely of raw (meat), (3) since one will not pay attention to the entire pot.

But even if the coals were not raked or covered with ashes it is muter to place a pot 5) next to it at its outside.

If it was fired with straw or stubble, it is muter to allow a pot to stay on it even if it was not g'rufo or k'tumo. ¹

RAMA If two kiroh – stoves are coupled, one beside the other, with an earthenware partition between them: if one is g'rufo or k'tumo and the second is not g'rufo or k'tumo, 6) (4) it is muter to allow a pot to stay on the one which is g'rufo or k'tumo, even though the one which is not g'rufo or k'tumo will add to its heat.

However, as for a 7) (5) tanur-stove even if it was fired with straw or stubble, it is forbidden to place even adjacent to it- 8) even if it is goruf v'kotum RAMA as long as it is of 9) yad soledes bo. ² It goes without saying that it is forbidden to let a pot stay within it or on it.

As for a (6) kupach-stove which has room for placing one pot on it, where it was fired with straw or stubble it has the status of a kiroh; where it was fired with gefes or wood it has the status of a tanur. 10) (Our types of ovens have the status of a kiroh).

(7) If one forgets and leaves a pot of food on a stove, if it is fully cooked it may be eaten, even though continued cooking improves it. But if it has begun to cook but is not yet fully cooked, it is 11) forbidden to be eaten until the night after Shabbos. Where one deliberately leaves a pot of food on the stove, it is forbidden in both cases RAMA until a time period has elapsed (after Shabbos) during which the cooking done on Shabbos could be done. (8) Where a non-Jew 9) returns it to a stove on Shabbos 13) the same law applies as for one who unintentionally leaves it. Where a 14) Jew (10) returns it, the same law applies as for one who deliberately leaves it standing. If, however, it continued cooking to its detriment, it may be eaten since no gain was derived from transgressing the prohibition. ³

15) Some hold that where it has already been cooked to the degree of 16) ma'achal Ben-Derosai (i.e. the name of a thief who ate his food semi cooked) or it is completely cooked and further cooking will improve it, it is muter to leave it on a kiroh RAMA or even on a tanur even one fired with gefes or wood, and even if it was not g'rufo or k'tumo. In this opinion, goruf v'kotum and firing with straw and stubble were mentioned only when the cooking process has begun but has not reached the stage of ma'achal B"D; or, where one has removed the pot from the stove and desires to return it on Shabbos. Where one forgets and leaves a pot of food, which has begun to cook, but has not reached the stage of ma'achal B"D, it is forbidden to eat it. It goes without saying where one intentionally leaves it there that it is forbidden to eat. RAMA The people's minbag is to be lenient and follow this last opinion.

¹ G'rufo – coals are raked from the stove; K'tumo – coals are covered with ashes

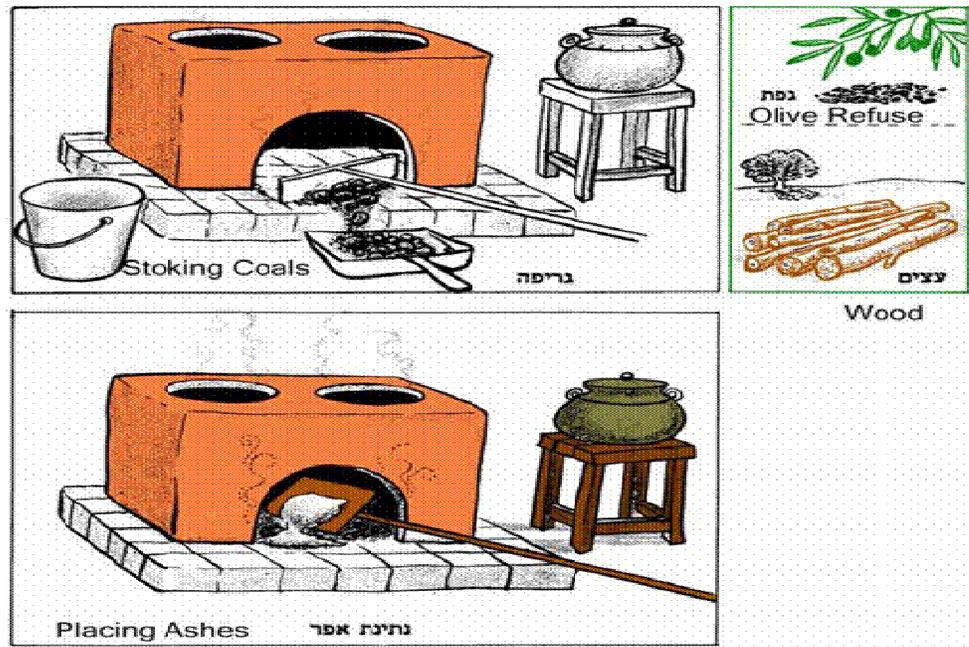

² A degree of heat at which food begins to cook.

³ See the beginning of simon 257.

All these laws about leaving a pot pertain to a pot that rests on an iron base or upon stones and does not touch the coals. But hatmana ⁴ on coals is forbidden according to all opinions. RAMA But some hold that even where the pot rests directly on the fire as long as its 17) upper part is not covered it is not hatmana and is muter, and so is the minbag. It is, however, heedful to raise it slightly from the fire before Shabbos, so that a Jew will be allowed to remove it. If it was not raised from the fire and it is still on the fire on Shabbos, it should be removed by a non-Jew. If a non-Jew is not available a 18) Jew may remove it, but he should be careful to remove it gently so as not to move the coals, and even if he moves them slightly this will be a davar she'eino miskavein ⁵ which is permitted.

The author of "Pnai Shabbos" has given permission to use his pictures

⁴ Hatmana – the wrapping up of a pot to retain its heat

⁵ A prohibited act that is done unintentionally.

Topics Discussed in this Se'if

1. The word 'nosnim' – to place, in the Mishna.
2. Sh'hija – leaving on the fire before Shabbos.
3. Mistamek v'ra lo and mistamek v'tov lo.
4. G'rufo and K'tumo.
5. The difference between a tanur, kiroh and kupach.
6. Placing next to the fire.
7. If sh'hija was done deliberately or unintentionally.

Since this is a long se'if, we need to break it down and deal with each section separately.

The source for this halacha is the Mishna in Shabbos 36b and the majority of the following Gemora ending on 38a.

Let us view the Mishna:

Shabbos 36b

A kiroh-stove that was fired with straw and stubble – “nosnim:” one may put a pot on it. If fired with ‘gefes’ (refuse of olives) or wood one may not “put” a pot on it, unless one raked the coals or covered them with ashes..

What Does the Mishna Mean by Nosnim?

The Mishna uses the word nosnim – to put or place, pots on the kiroh (stove). What does nosnim mean? The gemora explains nosnim and put in two ways:

1. To return to the stove; the opinion of Chanania.
2. Sh'hija, to place on the stove; the opinion of the Chachamim.

What is Sh'hiya?

*Sh'hiya*⁶ means to leave a pot of food on the fire before the onset of Shabbos and it remains there even after Shabbos has arrived.

What Is Wrong With Sh'hiya?

*Rashi*⁷ says that the problem with sh'hiya is that one might⁸ stir the coals, thereby transgressing a Torah prohibition. In other words, one might see that the food is not heating to one's satisfaction and one might stir the coals to raise the heat.

We see in the Mishna that if the stove is fired with straw and stubble, then – nosnim, which according to Chachamim means sh'hiya, one may place a pot of food on the stove without having to do g'rufo and k'tumo – raking the coals or covering them. Since straw and stubble burn very quickly, there are no coals that might be stoked to raise the fire.

However, when the stove is fired with gefes (refuse of olives) or wood, the problem of stoking the fire is real, as these “fires” become coals. According to Chanania, even in this second case one may do sh'hiya.

We are dealing with the second half of the Mishna where there are coals.

So it seems, according to the way the Chachamim explain the Mishna, sh'hiya is always forbidden, and according to Chanania, sh'hiya is always permitted (as he explains the Mishna to mean return, not sh'hiya).

However, the Gemora explains the following:

Sh'hiya is allowed

1. according to Chanania, if the food is cooked to a degree of⁹ ma'achal Ben Derosai.¹⁰

⁶ From the word shaba to stay.

⁷ Ad sheyigrof in the Mishna

⁸ We find a machlokes as to which issur is involved: Rashi says on Shabbos 34b (ge'eira – 4 lines down) that by stirring the coals one will cook the food – bishul. The Rambam (chapter 4 paragraph 3) says that there might be some sparks and one will cause more fire which is hav'ara – making fire.

⁹ See Mishna Berura 38 machlokes (argument) between Rashi and Rambam as to the degree of ma'achal Ben Derosai.

¹⁰ Ben Derosai is the name of a thief who ate his food semi cooked. Less than this degree sh'hiya is forbidden.

2. according to the Chachamim, when the food is mitstamek v'ra lo, hardening to its detriment.¹¹
3. according to both Chanania and the Chachamim, when there is a raw piece in the pot.

What do these terms mean?

Mitstamek v'ra lo – Food condensing through more cooking to its detriment. There is no reason to stoke the fire as the food will only get worse.

Mitstamek v'tov lo – Food that improves as it condenses. The Chachamim hold one might stoke the coals to improve the food.

Ma'achal Ben Derosai – A certain degree of cooking. Chanania holds that if the food is cooked to this degree one will not stoke the coals, as the food is edible.

In the third explanation above we mentioned that if there is a raw piece in the pot, sh'hija is muter. The reason is that a raw piece takes a long time to cook and it will not be ready for the night meal even if the fire was stoked. The source is the Gemora on Shabbos 18b.¹²

Raw What?

Rambam – even raw vegetables.

*Bais Yosef*¹³ – only raw meat.

The Bais Yosef argues saying that since the reason is that something raw takes a long time to cook, only raw meat fits the bill. The Rambam learns that since one had to put a raw piece of anything in the pot in order to allow him to do sh'hija, he will remember that it is forbidden to stoke the fire.

The Magen Avrohom (M" A) 4 and Mishna Berura (M" B) 9 rule like the Bais Yosef that only raw meat qualifies.

¹¹ Shabbos 37b

¹² 18 lines down.

¹³ v'im noosun

Summary

One may leave food on a stove fueled with coals if:

Chanania: If the food is cooked more than ma'achal Ben Derosai or there is raw meat in the pot.

Chachamim: If the food is mitstamek v'ra lo or there is raw meat in the pot.

If the food is not in this category the stove must be goruf v'kotum, which we will learn in the next shiur.

Review Questions

1. If nosnim according to Chanania means returning, does that mean that he permits sh'hija?
2. What is the reason for the answer to 1?
3. What can be the problem with leaving food on the fire before Shabbos?
4. Why the distinction between a wood fire and a straw fire?
5. What does mitstamek v'ra lo mean and how does it help?
6. What does mitstamek v'tov lo mean?
7. Why is it a problem according to the Chachamim and not a problem according to Chanania?
8. How does placing a raw piece of meat in the pot help to permit sh'hija?

Review Answers

1. In essence it means that he permits sh'hya when complying with certain conditions.
2. If the Mishna is referring to chazora then there is no issur to place it there before Shabbos, so why should it be ossur.
3. The problem is that one might stoke the fire to heat the food.
4. Straw burns quickly and after a short while there is nothing to stoke whereas wood produces coals which can be stoked.
5. Mitstamek v'ra lo means that the food or liquid is hardening to its detriment. Water, once boiled, is always mitstamek v'ra lo because it merely evaporates and does not improve in taste.
6. It means that the food is fully cooked but is improving in taste.
7. The Chachamim hold that since there is benefit from added heat there is room to suspect that one might stoke the coals. Chanania holds that since the food is already passed ma'achal ben Derosai there is no reason to presume that one might stoke the coals.
8. Since raw meat takes a long time to cook there is no reason to suspect that one will stoke the coals, as stoking will not cook the meat for the night meal. One removes one's thoughts from the cooking food.